Crime trumps homelessness

The priority is homelessness but the message is crime.

Two weeks after declaring his main goal was ending homelessness, Non-Partisan Association mayoral candidate Peter Ladner's election "action plan" is instead heavy with an anti-crime agenda.

Ladner is promising more cash for new police officers, he's pledging more public dollars for private security and he wants to turn uniformed city workers into the "eyes and ears on the streets."

But Ladner's cautious platform, made up of more than 50 "priorities," is short on actual funding promises.

It appears only two pledges listed in the NPA's 14-page document – funding more police officers and upgrading police facilities – call for significant city funds; neither is backed by dollar signs.

In releasing his platform yesterday, Ladner promised to work with senior governments to find the funding to solve the city's homelessness, addiction and mental health crises.

"We are not going to say that, because of the desperate need for shelter for homeless people, the city will take that on," Ladner said.

VISION Vancouver mayoral candidate Gregor Robertson took aim at NPA's plan.

"We have to insist that other levels of government come to the table."

But Vision Vancouver mayoral candidate Gregor Robertson said Ladner was "running away" from his party's record on homelessness.

"I don't think the problem has been solved, but we see Mr. Ladner deciding all of a sudden that crime is his primary focus."

Vision has yet to release its own platform.

VANOC goes to market

Yes, we're in the red, but don't be alarmed, says Vancouver 2010's money man.

Organizers of the 2010 Winter Olympics and Paralympics released their 2007-2008 annual report yesterday. It shows a $48.1 million deficit on $122.3 million income and $170.4 expenditures through July 31, 2008. Last year, VANOC recorded a nearly $61 million surplus.

Chief financial officer John McLaughlin said it's a matter of timing. Payments from sponsors in January 2009 and the International Olympic Committee in March 2009 are expected to reverse the shortfall.

"It's not necessarily indicative of a good year or a bad year; it's just indicative of what we did," he said.

McLaughlin said 79 per cent of revenues are committed, not counting tickets. VANOC will go on a $1 billion shopping spree over the next 16 months seeking goods and services ranging from transportation, energy and anti-doping equipment to accommodate and food and beverage.

Despite the global economic crisis, McLaughlin still forecasts a balanced $1.63 billion operations budget. A revised business plan is expected in early 2009.

"The situation we're finding ourselves in right now is pretty unparalleled," he said. "Trying to predict what's going to come out of it is hugely challenging and we wouldn't pretend to be able to predict."

Roundhouse, Coal Harbour have 2010 Games plans

The Roundhouse could be Canada Olympic House in 2010.

The Vancouver Board of Parks and Recreation is in talks with the Canadian Olympic Committee to use the Yaletown community centre's exhibition hall from Feb. 4-March 2, 2010 as a meeting place for athletes, coaches, their families and friends and sponsors.

Stanley District director Peter Kuran expects the performance centre to be a Cultural Olympiad venue, but the rest of the complex would remain open.

The 1888 red-brick Roundhouse was restored for Expo 86 and houses Engine 374, which hauled the first transcontinental train to the West Coast in 1887. Nearby David Lam Park will be one of two civic Live Sites.

"It's a fantastic location," Kuran said. "I think the COC and Cultural Olympiad realize that."

Coal Harbour community centre, however, would be off limits to the public from Jan. 1-March 31, 2010. Kuran said users would be shifted to West End community centres while 120 people from various agencies use Coal Harbour to coordinate logistics for 1,600 Olympic and Paralympic dignitaries.

"This would be a first-ever for an Olympics, which is to have all levels of government and other governing bodies all together," Kuran said.
