One of the best parts about spring in Vancouver is the cherry blossoms and with that comes the Cherry Blossom Festival.

The annual festival is returning this April, with a series of events throughout the month.

Some of the events that will happen are favourites like the Haiku readings, as well as concerts and cultural performances.

And there are also outdoor events to enjoy the pink buds like picnics, group bike rides and walks.

The festival shows off Vancouver's nearly 40,000 trees, which were originally given to the city as a gift from Japan. The city got its first trees back in the 1930's.

The Cherry Blossom Festival is all happening between April 2-26th in locations throughout Vancouver.

So, don't miss it – especially because it's free! And hopefully we'll have lots of trees this year as The Weather Network predicts a warmer than usual spring.
